

Hispanic Population By State 2020

In 2017, the Hispanic population of the United States accounted for about fifty-seven million people. Many Hispanic people who call the United States their home have immigrated to the States at some point in their lifetimes, but many Hispanic people were born in the United States, too.

As time goes on, more and more Hispanic people have been born in the US compared to those who were born elsewhere and moved to the States after birth. Going back one more year, the Hispanic population of America in 2016 was the greatest in California, Florida, Illinois, New York, and Texas.

In 2016, the population of the United States was a total of approximately 324,459,463 people. The Hispanic populations of California, Florida, Illinois, New York, and Texas were collectively the equivalent of % of all people living in America in the year 2016.

More specifically, the Hispanic population of each of these five states at the time were...
